

Debbie Mosher

I was born in Halifax and currently live in Dartmouth and raised my children in Cole Harbour. I am a mother of five children and several grandchildren. I have a Masters Degree in Adult Education and have work in health and education for over 35 years both in Nova Scotia and PEI.

I have been involved in painting since the 80's. I pursued art in the 80's to find means to balance a hectic lifestyle and to express my passions through art.

I have been very active in the local art community. I was a past member and president of the Contemporary Art Society of Nova Scotia and also a past member of Dartmouth Visual Art Society. I was a member of the Seabreeze Artists who showed at MacDonald House for 7 years. I have been in many juried shows over the years. My art has found homes throughout Canada and the United States.

I have taken a variety of classes at NSCAD throughout the years and many workshops with a variety of artist such as Tom Forestall, Jeannie Hancock, Marilyn MacAvoy.

I am also a Certified Grumbacher Art Instructor for acrylics and drawing for the Dartmouth Michaels Store.

I am also the Director of the Art Gallery of Humani-T located at both Humani-T Cafes. I also have my own business "Expressions of Colour Art Studio" where I have been teaching acrylic painting sessions for adults and youth over the last several years. I have held artistic workplace teambuilding workshops that have been very effective. I work and teach in a variety of styles. I enjoy linking my art to the written word, especially the words of the poet Rumi.

My philosophy is simple: engaging in art is deeply connected to one's overall wellbeing. There is surely a spiritual connection to ones expression through the arts.
